Pride & Connection

For well over two centuries, Brown Athletics have served as points of pride and connection for Brown University and the community. And—despite resource and finding shortfall and facilities challenges—the programs have achieved admirable levels of success.

But the Brown Athletics story needs a new chapter.

Echoing the prophetic words of William H. P. Fauselle, Brown’s first president, now is the time for Brown Athletics to “push out the horizon.” We encourage our community to join in this important fundraising effort so that the programs, coaches, and student-athletes we admire will no longer be as vulnerable to external economic variables or the vagaries of university budgets. With donor support, we will successfully “realize a future full of promise,” providing each program with the best funding, coaching and facilities possible.

“A strong athletics program enriches the lives of our students today and positions them for leadership roles tomorrow. By supporting our athletes and our facilities, Brown will be prepared to compete with confidence and distinction well into the future.”

Realizing a Future Full of Promise

The Athletics Initiative

at Brown
Brown Athletics Endowment: Securing the Future

From varsity teams securing Division I championships to intercollegiate opponents engaging in a joust to roundhouse kick, athletics embraces a many-faceted existence: maintaining a healthy lifestyle, the pursuit of athletic excellence, and a tradition of excellence. Athletics is widely embraced across campus.

But to ensure its financial sustainability, the University seeks donors who choose to support the Athletics Department. Athletics is just one of many areas that can be supported with a gift. If creating a new endowment is not feasible, donors may choose, instead, to invest in the current endowment. While the financial support is needed, the University also seeks the kind of reliable, recurring revenue streams provided by endowed support. With the financial security our teams, students, and Athletics Department will be less vulnerable to fluctuating revenues. Having endowed revenue sources will also allow our coaches to focus on their coaching roles and educate tomorrow’s leaders.

Endowment Giving Opportunities

ATHLETIC DIRECTOR'S CHAIR $1.5 Million
The Athletic Director is one of the most prominent roles in Athletics and is an accoutrement to the athletic department. Endowing this position will help secure our program’s future, preserve a center of excellence, and educate tomorrow’s leaders.

HEAD COACH CHAIRS AND SPECIAL PURPOSE FUNDS $500,000-$999,999
Dedicated coaches enable nearly 1,000 student-athletes to achieve their competitive best and navigate all aspects of college and beyond. Endowing a Brown coaching position helps the University support and retain those elite individuals.

ENDOW AN ENTIRE SPORT $500,000 and above
Endowing a sport will provide for programmatic needs in perpetuity and, more importantly, will ensure that all future dollars given to that sport will be directed toward program enhancements.

SPECIAL PURPOSE FUNDS $500,000 and above
Raising up with the critical needs of our athletic teams in a common challenge-strained budgets can often only fund the bare essentials. Endowed funds to support travel, equipment purchases, facilities, rentals, or the payment of financial aid awards will forever secure your support.

Enabling Facilities: A Reflection of Talent and Desire

For decades, Brown student-athletes have performed at the highest levels of competition, despite often not having the advantage of top facilities to support their talents. However, that all changed with the opening of the Nelson Fitness Center, Katherine Moran Coleman Aquatic Center, Stevenson Strength and Conditioning Center, Botwin Quadrangle, and Gardner Brown Arena in the spring of 2015. That said, the new facilities reflect the excellence of the University and its commitment to supporting athletics. The facilities are also serving as highly-effective recruiting tools for prospective student-athletes and student-athletes.

Now that the new standard for facilities has been set, the University has unraveled a series of urgent projects needed now. Upgrading our current facilities will enhance Brown’s attractiveness to recruits, improve player safety, and ensure that student-athletes’ skills remain at peak performance levels.

Annual Giving: Support for Today

While the main focus of the Athletics Initiative is to help secure and advance the future of Athletics at Brown, we cannot forget the urgent need to meet today’s ongoing operating expense challenges. Annual giving to the Brown University Sports Foundation is truly the lifeblood of our 32 varsity teams.

These gifts support club programs, intramural and extramural activities, and the general funded student body and community. They fund ongoing operational costs on a day-to-day basis and provide an average more than 20% of the Athletic Department’s overall fiscal budget. These expenses include purchasing new uniforms, training teams to travel with pride and distinction, or procuring new equipment. Annual giving allows every donor to have a direct influence on our Athletics programs and to play a meaningful part in all efforts to expand the athletic program—and the Athletic Director’s Excellence Fund helps to ensure the immediate success of the programs. Because Brown Athletics are the university’s dollar amounts differ from year to year, gifts for each program will provide incremental support for the program.

Field Baseball
Total Project Cost: $2 Million
Supporters with gifts of $1,000-$4,999 make up the $1.5 million in annual-use dollar raised above the yearly goal for each program. Without the dollars from these supporters, our field baseball program would not be able to compete effectively.

Field Hockey and Field Baseball
Total Project Cost: $4.5 Million
Supporters with gifts of any size make up the $3.5 million in annual-use dollar raised above the yearly goal for each program. Without the dollars from these supporters, our field hockey and field baseball programs would not be able to compete effectively.

These new spaces reflect the excellence of the University and its commitment to supporting athletics. The facilities are also serving as highly effective recruiting tools for prospective student-athletes and student-athletes.

Now that the new standard for facilities has been set, the University has envisioned a series of additional urgently needed projects. Annual Giving: Support for Tomorrow

“Brown University has an outstanding reputation of excellence and a tradition of success, as a result there is great potential. We must provide our student-athletes and coaches with the best competitive opportunities possible so they can achieve that potential today.”

Jack Hayes
Director of Athletics
Brown Athletics Endowment: Securing the Future

From varsity teams securing Division I championships to renowned coaches engaging as club-level to nourish enthusiasm maintaining a healthy parity, the pursuit of athletics at Brown is widely embraced across campus. But to assure that financial sustainability, the University sees the kind of reliable, recurring revenue streams provided by endowed support. With the financial security our teams, students, and Athletics Department will be less vulnerable to budgetary pressures. Having endowed revenue sources will also help to ensure staffing, retain our coaches, and other computer-financial packages to in-demand student-athletes.

If creating a new endowment is not feasible, donors may choose, instead, to fund pre-existing endowed funds dedicated to areas such as coaching and administrative salaries, international travel needs, to add to pre-existing endowment funds dedicated to financial aid packages to deserving student-athletes. Help to expand staffing, retain our coaches, and offer competitive financial aid packages to deserving student-athletes.

“Endowing each of my ten coaching positions—excluding my own—would have a direct and tangible impact on my program in terms of finding and, frankly, of prestige.”
